We can also send you a list of hotels nearby.

Arrival and how to get there

The German Research Institute for Public Administration is located on the Campus of the German University of Administrative Sciences in the old historical town Speyer. Major cities close by are Mannheim, Heidelberg, Frankfurt, Stuttgart and Karlsruhe. Frankfurt Airport is approximately 100 km (1 h hour by train) away.

The closest airports are Frankfurt/Main and Stuttgart from where you have a direct connection to Mannheim main-station via ICE-train. Between Mannheim and Speyer main station there is a regional train (S3 or S4) every 30 min (www.diebahn.de).

The university campus and the research institute are approximately 2 km away from Speyer main-station. There is a bus (No. 561) and taxis waiting in front of the train-station.

Professionalization of Higher Education Management? Comparative Perspectives on University Leadership and Administration

September, 6th -7th, 2010

voneinander wissen

Similar to broader developments within the non-profit and public sector over the last two decades higher education organizations have been subject to profound organizational transformations. Despite very different culturally embedded models and national path-dependencies there is a general trend towards a more “managerial regime” of university governance and institutional self-management. While there has been broad interest in subsequent institutional responses of universities and implications regarding research activities, changes of university leadership and administration have received less attention in theoretical and empirical research so far.

The workshop aims at bringing together scholars and contributions to higher education management from a variety of disciplinary and transdisciplinary perspectives and from very different countries.
